

Shane Warne denies facelift rumours on Twitter

NewsCore | September 03, 2010 2:11pm

A+ A- Share

2 retweet

SHANE Warne has denied having plastic surgery after a week of rumours and innuendo about his appearance.

The famous cricketer was finally forced to use his Twitter account to set the record straight after a picture of him at an event in Melbourne sparked a whirl of speculation.

"NO have not had facelift or any work done to face, training hard and lost 5kg. Yes have had teeth whitened," he tweeted.

He later added: "NO have not had hair transplant, have re-grown my own hair with laser therapy!! It works and happy with results!!"

It was also revealed today that the ex-cricketer was going into business with Australian gambling kingpin James Packer.

The duo are to launch a joint venture in which Warne is likely to open his own branded poker room at Packer's Crown Casinos in Melbourne.

Work? ... Former Australian leg spinner Shane Warne at a press conference promoting the Groove Gallery this week. Picture: Chris Scott

Warne, an ardent 1980s music fan, is also involved in a business alliance called Groove Gallery, a company that sells ambient music to gyms, cafes and restaurants that wish to subconsciously put their customers in the mood to spend.

"Life is going great, never been better," Warne said.

"Warne, an ardent 1980s music fan, is also involved in a business alliance called TheGrooveGallery.com, a company that sells ambient music to gyms, cafes and restaurants that wish to subconsciously put their customers in the mood to spend."